

RACIAL LITERACY LECTURE SERIES

WEDNESDAY
December 6, 2017
5 – 8 PM

Rahmell's INFERNO

Rahmell Peebles
Actor, Performer, Writer

A man trapped inside America's solitary belly of the beast is in desperate search for liberation. Sentenced to four hundred and fifty years, he makes his final appeal to the "most high" judge. He defends a "younger Rahmell" against a prosecution team of "demons" while shedding light on some of the most destructive issues in the American education system, and the black american psyche. An autobiographical tale filled with laughs, cries, and the inspiration to make change. Not only in the system, but most importantly in ones self. Self confrontation is a must, and all who bear witness will see god.

Rahmell Peebles is an actor, writer, all around artist. When he was sixteen years of age he was put on a long term suspension for having a keychain pocket knife on school grounds. The suspension was due to last for over a year, and his superintendent initially requested that he be put in alternative schooling following his suspension. At the time Rahmell was labeled an at risk youth, a special education student, and struggled with many demons as a result of coming from a broken home. Six years later he graduated from the prestigious Morehouse College with a Bachelor's in Philosophy with Honors. He initially took up acting as a form of therapy, but then fully committed to the craft as a career upon graduation. Since then he has trained with the British American Drama Academy in Oxford, England among other notable programs, and is a recipient of the American Black Film Festival's NBC Star project award. He is a proud member of Changing Perceptions Theater Company, and Theater Instructor at the Schomburg Center's Junior Scholars Program. He has performed and spoke at numerous programs and high schools in the tri-state area and his solo show Rahmell's INFERNO has impacted lives for over a year.

Cowin Auditorium

Teachers College, Columbia University
525 West 120th Street, New York, NY
For more information: www.tc.edu